Did You Know?

The Saint Mary's College Museum of Art has embarked on a long-term project to recatalog and inventory the entire collection in a new online database, and is now closed until next February. New collections manager Robin Bernhard, who came to the College from the Contemporary Jewish Museum in San Francisco, is heading up the project, which will preserve the information about each object and maintain the integrity, security, and cultural significance of the works of art and artifacts. It will also give the SMC community and public online access to the collection.

Process Dance Festival

Launched in 2014, the MFA in Dance program offers dancers, choreographers, and designers the chance to study and prepare for employment in professional dance organizations and higher education. Students from the class of 2017 will present their thesis concerts from both tracks—Creative Practice and Design & Production—in the Process Dance Festival, June 17–18, 12 p.m.–8 p.m., two days of dance, art, and creative expression. Don't miss the food trucks!

Bias Incident Response Team Listens and Guides

What can you do if someone belittles you somehow, besides feeling victimized and suffering in silence? At SMC, you can turn to BIRT, the 18-member Bias Incident Response Team (faculty, staff, Brothers, and students), who will listen and guide you to whatever help you need.

Making of a Head Coach

Women's basketball forward Devon Brookshire '16, MA '17, a fifth-year player with the Gaels who is pursuing her master's degree in kinesiology, works with athletics events and facilities staff to learn as much as she can about the inner workings of college athletics. All to prepare herself for her ultimate goal—to be a college women's basketball head coach and make a positive difference in people's lives.

Campus Facilities Update

From upgrades to science labs, residential halls, the Soda Center, and student-centered spaces like Oliver Hall, the bookstore, and Dryden Hall, there is a lot of work and change planned for the
